

Tamie Proscia-Lieto

MD, MBA, CHSE, CHCQM, FACP

Dr. Proscia-Lieto is an internist, medical educator, and a member of the Governor's Council of New Jersey Chapter of ACP. She is a graduate of the combined Sophie Davis School of Biomedical Education (BS) and SUNY Downstate College of Medicine (MD).

After completing internal medicine residency training, along with a chief resident year, at Staten Island University Hospital, she stayed on as a full-time faculty member. She became the Assistant Director of Medicine, a position with many diversified roles, including developing a clinical practice to serve the local community in addition to overseeing the medical education of residents and 3rd- and 4th-year medical students and has served as a peer quality reviewer. She received additional training and certification in nutrition support, quality medicine and simulation in medical education.

Dr. Proscia-Lieto is an advocate of quality health care, humanism and professionalism in medicine. She is currently a full-time Clinical Associate Professor of Internal Medicine in the department of Primary Care at the Touro College of Osteopathic Medicine Middletown, NY, where she serves many roles including: Chair of the Admission's Committee, Course Director for the Early Clinical Experience: Introduction to Doctoring Course and Advisor to the student chapter of the Gold Humanism Honor Society.

Dr. Proscia-Lieto is an active member of the NJACP and serves on the Governors' Council of our Chapter. She leads the student and resident abstract competition, serves as co- chair on the annual program planning committee, as well as co- chair of the membership and diversity committee. She also helps lead many chapter-related activities including membership engagement and the resident community outreach projects.
